A group of former chiefs and police officers of the Paraguayan capital police now in exile in Clorinda, Argentina, issued a pamphlet on 5 June 1947 in which they called upon the members of the Asuncion police to abandon their positions and support the revolutionary movement against the Morinigo government. In addition to calling for action against the Morinigo government, recommendations for reforms within the police organization were included as a basis for a new and modern police force. The call was to be effective 12 June 1947, one week from the date of the issuance of the pamphlet, but source reported that Dr. Cesar Vasconsellos, Chief of Police in Asuncion, said that it had no effect upon the members of the police force.
